Rethinking Educational Change: From Static to Dynamic

Michael Fullan, the renowned educational thought leader and author, challenges the traditional notions of educational change as a linear and top-down process. He argues that effective change is a messy, nonlinear, and collaborative journey that requires a shift from a "rational-technical" to a "change leadership" mindset.

Fullan emphasizes the need for a "living system" approach that empowers all stakeholders - teachers, students, administrators, and the community - to actively participate in shaping the learning experience. He introduces the concept of "coherence as process," where change is not imposed but emerges through dialogue, experimentation, and ongoing reflection.
